

What other ways can you help out?

If you've got access to a computer, thousands of different volunteer projects and roles are available to you — from your home, the library, a coffee shop, anywhere with an Internet connection. Here are just a few:

- Mentor a young person or child by creating a close relationship
- Update/Create our blog, podcast, video, or social networking profile
- Staff a crisis hotline for local domestic issues, unrest or violence
- Review and provide feedback on Tofauti's strategic plan, marketing strategy, safety and security procedures, or website
- Assist with research, analysis, writing, or editing
- Write a grant, get the word out on fundraising, or send emails and make phone calls to current or potential donors
- Create a virtual global team of Idealists who support one another's efforts to do good wherever they are in the world
- Develop, update, or manage our website
- Translate outreach materials for our projects

And while it's often called online or virtual volunteering, getting involved remotely doesn't have to require an Internet connection. For example, you can use a cell phone to tag photos, text locations of community features like bicycle lanes or public parks, or even check in on and stay connected in an accessible way with the young person you're mentoring.
