

Why online volunteering?

So why might you consider this mode of getting involved?

- Busy schedule? E-volunteering offers flexible scheduling. By determining how much time you're able to contribute and then fitting it into your day as you can, you can get involved in a way that's more convenient for you.
- Tough time getting around? E-volunteer from home. Online volunteering can also be great for people with transportation or mobility challenges, or with family obligations (like young children) that make volunteering in-person difficult.
- Want to reach (far, far) out? E-volunteer around the world without a passport. Lastly, online volunteering is an excellent way to get involved in a community other than your own. For example, if you've been considering international volunteering but aren't sure you have the time or finances to travel right now, online volunteering can provide an opportunity to assist an NGO like Tofauti on the Move with projects in another community.
 - Virtual volunteering can even serve as a gateway establishing contacts and relationships for when you're someday able to volunteer abroad—or conversely, a way to stay in touch after returning home.
 - Currently already living and working abroad? As pointed out in Tofauti on the Move, online volunteering can be a dynamic way to stay connected to what's happening at home.
